The Rights and Wrongs of Human Cloning

a lecture by Glenn Graber

Both sides of the debate about cloning offer absolute answers. Graber explores the gray domain between the two sides in this complex issue through the use of hypothetical scenarios and sorts out what about human cloning might be ethically acceptable and what might not be.

Monday, September 13 at 3:30 p.m. in EESAT 130

Graber is a Professor of Philosophy at the University of Tennessee, Knoxville where he has taught since 1968. He is also a professor in the Department of Medicine in the University of Tennessee Medical Center at Knoxville, where he is involved in clinical teaching and consultation. He is author, co-author, or co-editor of 6 books, more than 40 articles, and 5 multi-media programs, dealing with a variety of topics in ethical theory, religious ethics, medical ethics, and professional ethics.

The lecture is free and open to the public.
